ery grave duties devolving upon them, but wehave every confidence in their patriotism The effort to precipitate the State into revolution wili result in nothing. The members oboses by the people for their ability are pertainly as able as an irresponsible body, drawn together by the hope of establishing a party and acquiring position upon the ruins of the Government. Indeed, the as sumption by these people, their assertion that the Legislature is incompetent to discharge the duties for which ite members were elected, is a piece of unparaileled impudence. The cry for a Convention is still loss defensible. Virginia hae called a Border State Convention, to assemble in Frankfort on the 27th of May. If the Legislature were to submit the question of a Convention, it would be a month before the official intel ligence could be known. Another month would be necessary for the election of delegates and their assembling. Thus it would be the 27th of May before Kentucky could take a position, even admitting what we most emphetically deny, that the Convention was constitutional

We have pointed out that these Conventione are irresponsible despotisms, unre strained by law, and claiming the extremest overeign power. They are dangerous in limited only by their own discretion. It is no less true that a few years ago the people of the State, by the most colemn act and Purchasers will consult their with the most careful restrictions, pointed out the manner in which this Constitution was to be amended, and how a general State Convention should be salled. We confess that we hear, with some eurprise, that it is necessary to set at defiance this published and authentic will of the people, to do which nothing but the determination to throw off the State Government, as well as the Federal, > would justify. The desire for the people of the State to have an opportunity to express their opinions, though urged by demagogues, ie worthy of consideration; but there is no necessity for illegal action. In August the new Legislature can be elected, which, coming fresh from the people, will be able to docido, in a legitimate way, the course which the intereste of the State require her to pureue. Thie een be done as econ as the Con vention could meet and act.
